In keeping with its reputation for culinary excellence and expansive, natural beauty, California claimed half the spots on the list, with eight winners alone in "America's Finest City," a.k.a. San Diego. The Bay Area made a strong showing with six winners. New York City's sweeping skyline helped the Empire State take five spots, while Washington earned three. Two Phoenix, Arizona, restaurants are winners, along with two Illinois restaurants, in addition to honorees in 15 other states, including Alaska, Georgia, Hawaii, Michigan, New Jersey, Oregon, and Texas, among others.

"The winning restaurants on this list represent the best in destination dining," says Caroline Potter, OpenTable's Chief Dining Officer. "Whether you're traveling to discover the beauty and local bounty of a new city or you want to experience the best of what's in your own backyard, these restaurants will transport you with awe-inspiring panoramas and food to match. From sexy urban skylines to stunning vistas courtesy of Mother Nature, the views at these top restaurants will take your breath away — but not your appetite."
